SUMMARY.

The revolutionary societies in St. Petersburg and the rest of the realms of the people have been a failure.

The suspended the order for general instruction at the beginning of the new year.

It is estimated that 10,000 people were killed in the fighting in Moscow.

Rebel troops, locomotive at full speed and a military train, wrecking it from killing a number of soldiers returning from Manchuria.

Prince Gorch, who with a force is operating against the Lithuanian Republic, in the Baltic provinces, defeated 4000 rebels and captured four insurgent villages.

Mr. Ballou speaking in support of Mr. Lyttelton, said that he was in favour of a military campaign which would result in greater freedom with the colonies.

He urged that there should be power to defend the independent existence of growing states which threatened to throttle British trade.

Mr. Lyttelton said that business for the motherland should not be in the motherland of preference.

He said that a good starting point would be a free uniform duty for revenue purposes upon imports of cottons.

Mr. Lyttelton, in an address at West Birmingham, said the first test in the Union programme was a commercial arrangement with the colonies, retaliation was the next.

Mr. Michael Davitt will stand England in support of the candidates of the Independent Labour party, of whom there are 50.

It is understood that of these 50 candidates Mr. Davitt hopes that one-half will be returned.

The Social Democratic Federation of Great Britain supports Home Rule.

Mr. McMillan, who was elected Mayor of New York on the Democratic ticket, in making his appointment, said he was in favour of a military campaign which would result in greater freedom with the colonies.

He told the body of municipal departments that his ambition was to give New York a clean, efficient, and honest government.

During 1905 Canada received 11,000 immigrants, of whom 49,000 were British.

The Turkish police have discovered in the Bulgarian quarter of a town near Salonica a large number of finished and unfinished bombs.

The men handling grain at Darling Island struck work without notice, and demanded an increase of wages.

A large quantity of grain is held in the wharves, and the employers granted a 20 per cent. increase.

The body of a man found at Coogee beach has been identified as that of Frank Vazara, a Chinaman, aged 50 years.

The police cannot account for the circumstances of his death, being unable to obtain any evidence to support the suspicion of suicide.

Mr. Carruthers, commenting upon the state of finances, says that the position is very bright, and that the industrial outlook is highly promising.

He expects, as the result of inquiries made at the Agent-General's office, that there will be a steady stream of immigrants to New South Wales.

The demands of the cooks and stewards for increased wages will be submitted to a conference of the shipping owners in Melbourne this month.

The cause of the death of Sir Hugh Nelson was a tumour on the right lung.

The New Zealand Rugby Union has accepted the offer of the colony's football team to return, via America, at the Government's expense.

The South Coast Rugby Association's prize money was handed over yesterday. The champion aggregate was secured by C. Morris, of Goulburn.

A crew in H.M.S. Toronto came down to a record in the 100 yards relay race in rowing race in services wharves yesterday.

Our Narrabri correspondent says that rabbit-traps in that district can easily earn good wages.

John Welsh, a child of 6 years of age, was trying to climb on to the railway platform at Springfield last night when a train killed the little fellow.

A track place between a car and a tree at Koosar last evening, Clement Lewis, a passenger, was severely injured. The conductor was slightly injured.

NOTICES.

ALL THE WORLD OVER.

The "Herald's" Page for Women is published on Wednesdays. Communications should be addressed to "The Editor, A Page for Women, Herald Office." Contributions from women preferred, will be considered. They should not exceed half a column in length.

TECHNICAL SCHOOLS IN EUROPE.

The happiness of mankind depends upon the condition of women. Every girl made able to support herself well by industrial arts or business ability increases the wealth, the respect, and the civilization of her country. In France, Germany, Italy, and England technical schools for girls are numerous. The interest and education of the girls in the schools are said to be very great. Americans admit that they have a great deal to learn from Europe in regard to the training of women. Mrs. Woolman, the director of domestic science in Teachers' College, and head of the Manhattan Trade School, think that Americans will have to work very intelligently and be very wide awake in order to keep Europe from leaving them very far behind.

The general arrangement in the technical schools of Europe devotes the morning to technical subjects and the afternoon to hand-work. One very interesting feature is the sales department. The girls are allowed to make things to sell. The system has obvious advantages. The work of the girls is subject to the most effective and judicious criticism there is. What a teacher says about a lesson may not take effect, but if the public buys all the work that a girl turns out and asks for more, the chances are that she will not neglect what she is set to do.

A great use is made of drawing. Before undertaking to make an artistic garment the girl works it out in design in full size, and submits it for approval. Then she does the article from her design. The work is true to work in China, in glass, and in other materials. Girls are shown how to make the class work wonderfully effective. The history centres around it, and so do the mathematics.

The chemistry goes right into the reason for the choice of different materials, and is especially effective in reference to cooking. The girls know what food is nutritious, and why it is so.

All of these women's schools bear in mind that no matter what the pupil is to do, she must be expert in the art of housekeeping and in the training and care of children.

FASHION.

One of the prettiest enterprises ever seen at a fashion show is round Loughborough filled with roses. A dish holding water was set in the crown. It looked as though a garden had served temporarily for a basket, while the roses were being gathered.

Whether a gown be delicate or high neck, the top of the bust is to use lace medallions threaded together with velvet ribbons. In a low-cut gown these medallions look the prettiest, outlining the neck, back, and front. It is in the ribbon, rather than the lace, that the touch that tells is emphasized. At the left side of the ribbon, arranged in a circle of roses, are three roses. These roses, if intended to represent peacock feathers, would look very fetching. The peacock feather could be painted instead of embossed, with probably effect. Cream white Chantilly lace medallions may be used, or lace dyed to match the colour of the gown.

The French widow looks very uninviting to English and American eyes. The veil is the only distinguishing mark of her mourning. This is worn over the face, and is attached to the hat at the side, the back being free.

Fantastic jewellery is all the rage in Paris now. Every smart Parisienne is seeking for strange, weird-looking stones, uncut and unpolished, and set irregularly in tinted metal. These gems are usually artificial, and real stones are almost at a discount. The false stones are wonderfully cut, and thought by many to be more beautiful than the real ones. The most popular stone of all, however, is the amethyst, real or unreal.

The Duchess of Northumberland, a woman of the Duke of Argyle, is a woman of quiet and simple, but perfect taste (says the "Lady's Pictorial"). She is clever and exceptionally good. Her interest in art and sympathy with the workers of the world are natural and practically evidenced. The Duchess is always richly, but simply, attired, and cares not for a fig for fashion. Grey is her favourite colour. She never wears jewels, save for special occasions, but her lace is superb. She does not care for society, but fills her time with great benefit to humanity. Her daughters are like her in tastes and dispositions.

The Emperor of Japan has just received from the Duke of Northumberland the sixtieth anniversary of the Order of the Crown—in recognition of her voluntary services in nursing the wounded in the military hospitals of Tokio and Hiroshima. Mrs. Richardson was the first English woman to go to Japan. Her title is "The English Mother." Mrs. Richardson is the widow of Colonel J. C. Richardson, of Glamorgan Park. She first took up nursing with a view to aiding the tenants on her Welsh estate.

A fashion once followed in London and Paris during the late Stuart and early Georgian years has been introduced to Berlin by the Crown Princess of Germany. The fashion, called "the canary," was first introduced in the borders, which show Gothic figures, tulips treated in the Morris style, flowers overgrowing a lattice, and conventional designs of all sorts.

Short, rough necklaces of graduated beads, the largest being in front, are called chutes or waterfall. In Paris, and are being much worn. They would be a treat to us, for them could be imported to Australia, where beads are not much worn.

Black embroidery on white leather, with a touch of gold here and there, makes an attractive trimming on some of the newest gowns from Paris.

The practice of killing white herons for cigarette cases is going on now in Florida as it was years ago. New York is the great centre for the distribution of heron plumage. Nevertheless, there is a strong movement in the interests of the birds. Prominent women are being asked to refuse to buy the crests, and to influence others to do so. A bill has been brought in prohibiting the sale of cigarette cases, but it was defeated. Not nearly so many have now been decorated with the plumage of birds as were 20 or 30 years ago. Parrots' wings or geese's breasts are quite out.

CREAMED CELERY IN CHEESE SHELL.

Cut the cleaned celery stalks in pieces an inch long, and let cook in boiling water to cover till tender. For three cups of pieces make a pint of white sauce, using the water in which the celery was cooked, with cream as the liquid. Turn into a saucer of an Edam cheese, cover the top with half a cup of blanched cranberries, and add a tablespoonful of creamed butter, and let brown in the oven. Add a slight scraping of cheese with each service of celery. For a more elaborate service add parboiled oysters with the celery, and use the oyster liquor in making the sauce as often as it covers a space on the wall. Still, though

SOME FASHION NOTIONS.

When hair is coiled low on the neck one especially noticeable ornament is the finishing knot for the top of the coil. A novel one is a graceful feather spray in the form of an open lily bud and a bud. At one side of the coil of hair the lily and the bud are caught, while at the opposite side is a smaller bud and a leaf.

Long gloves generally slip down when one least wishes them to. A remedy is to cut a deep V in the top of a long glove, sew little silk eyelets to either side, and then lace it up. Silk cord of great length should be at the glove, may be used. Silver or gold cord will do. The ends of the cord are usually finished with little tassels, and they may be of silk, gilt, or pearl beads, or chevilles. The glove laced in this way is sure to stay in its proper place. The lacing adds to, rather than detracts, from its good looks.

Another odd little hair ornament which is pretty and original in effect, yet very simple to make, is of braided strands of satin ribbon, wide enough to make a two-inch band, which is only long enough to just outline the top of the coil, while at either side is finished with a silk tassel.

A dainty little smart touch is formed of a wreath of tiny ribbon bows. It can be used in a number of attractive ways. For instance, the skirt of an evening gown which has its wide fluffy effect at the bottom produced by fanlike pleats shows a little ribbon wreath with a lily at the top of each group of pleats. A white satin evening bodice could have a smart touch given it by having a brooch down the front, trimmed with four small delicate green ribbon wreaths, through which a silvery black chiffon scarf was threaded. The ends could be finished with clusters of green chiffon bows. The wreaths are pretty, made of pink ribbon rosebuds, and twisted on green ribbon stems.

I am ready to grant that few of the pictures which we hang on our walls add to the decorative effect of the rooms. I cannot go so far as the severe critics who would banish them as useless, but I can say that most of them are well worth saving. In fact, there are many who have a special fondness for them, and these need not be ashamed of seeking guidance. It is a mistake to suppose that the rich can hope to have beautiful things around them, and it is equally a mistake to suppose that there should be a fashion in beauty. Before all things, the home should be a home, and the majority should speak in us of home. It is a pity that so many homes should only tell us that their owners have utterly conventional minds, and have never troubled to have a taste of their own. Someone was consulting me the other day about the decoration of a new house, and in speaking of some detail of ornament he said, "But will not be the rich, the rich?" To this I replied that could it be better whether it were the right thing so long was he sure I liked it. But he remonstrated that it was not likely to have the courage of one's taste, and so vexatious after one had decorated one's house to have people coming in and telling one that this or that was not right.

DISTINCTION RATHER THAN PROPOSITION.

I do not think the real difficulty is having the courage of one's taste, but forming a taste of one's own, and knowing what one's taste is. Anyone who really admires, and knows his reasons for admiring, will not be shaken because he finds that others do not admire what he does. Yet, when I speak of taste, I mean it with some capital letters, and practically evidenced. The Duchess is always richly, but simply, attired, and cares not for a fig for fashion. Grey is her favourite colour. She never wears jewels, save for special occasions, but her lace is superb.

She does not care for society, but fills her time with great benefit to humanity.

Her daughters are like her in tastes and dispositions.

Her daughters are like her in tastes and dispositions.

It is a mistake to suppose that only the rich can hope to have beautiful things around them, and it is equally a mistake to suppose that there should be a fashion in beauty. Before all things, the home should be a home, and the majority should speak in us of home. It is a pity that so many homes should only tell us that their owners have utterly conventional minds, and have never troubled to have a taste of their own. Someone was consulting me the other day about the decoration of a new house, and in speaking of some detail of ornament he said, "But will not be the rich, the rich?" To this I replied that could it be better whether it were the right thing so long was he sure I liked it. But he remonstrated that it was not likely to have the courage of one's taste, and so vexatious after one had decorated one's house to have people coming in and telling one that this or that was not right.

DISTINCTION RATHER THAN PROPOSITION.

I do not think the real difficulty is having the courage of one's taste, but forming a taste of one's own, and knowing what one's taste is. Anyone who really admires, and knows his reasons for admiring, will not be shaken because he finds that others do not admire what he does. Yet, when I speak of taste, I mean it with some capital letters, and practically evidenced. The Duchess is always richly, but simply, attired, and cares not for a fig for fashion. Grey is her favourite colour. She never wears jewels, save for special occasions, but her lace is superb.

She does not care for society, but fills her time with great benefit to humanity.

Her daughters are like her in tastes and dispositions.

The Duchess of Northumberland, a woman of the Duke of Argyle, is a woman of quiet and simple, but perfect taste (says the "Lady's Pictorial"). She is clever and exceptionally good. Her interest in art and sympathy with the workers of the world are natural and practically evidenced. The Duchess is always richly, but simply, attired, and cares not for a fig for fashion. Grey is her favourite colour. She never wears jewels, save for special occasions, but her lace is superb.
